Praise the Lord and Good Evening,

My husband and I were walking through a store earlier this evening and I noticed a lot of candy/baskets/eggs and other Easter treats on sale. The event was over and the store had signs with 50% off of the original price. Funny how the same items just a day ago couldn't be had for such a deep discount. But one day later and the savings were dramatic. The world views Resurrection Sunday as opportunity for financial gain.....the enemy would love for the saints to pay homage to the day. He's not upset that churches are filled with people coming for the day. He's not shaking at the notion that so many people will sit in new suits and dresses for one morning. People will schedule their family time of celebration to include warming pews for a period of time. The enemy isn't really concerned about that....what he doesn't want is for people to come to the conclusion that Jesus' resurrection is just as powerful the day after as it was the day off....the empty tomb must have as much meaning Monday morning as it did Sunday morning.

Jesus rose for us and the weight is just as heavy as it now as it was over 2,000 years ago. The price of love still cost Him His life....the debt He paid is still as costly and means as much. His promise to return for a people prepared to meet Him is still filled with power as it was when He told His disciples to go to Jerusalem and wait until they were given power (the Holy Ghost).....there's no discount on Jesus love or the impact it had and continues to have on mankind. The day after doesn't diminish what He did and what He requires of those who want to spend eternity with Him. It has to mean so much that we follow Him regardless of the day....there is no discount. Every day's price is that of love!

Thus spake he, signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, he said unto him, Follow me. (John 21:19 KJV)
